If a model is not specified, then it is assumed that you are using the default template for the current controller: // if you are active / recipes / add echo $ this-> form-> create ('recipe'); Output: This poster will data from the module to the Add () RecipeController action action. Default True: $ options = array ('m' => 'male', 'f' => 'female'); echo $ this-> form-> select ('gender', $ options, array ('escape' => false)); $ Attributes ['Options'] This key allows you to manually specify options for a selected input or for a radio group. Any non-special option name will be considered an HTML attribute and applied to the generated HTML input element. The Div Wrapping will have a class name required attached if the validation rules for the model field do not specify the quotes wants => true. They allow buffering the tag of the form generated, instead of returning with the connection. First of all, you can specify a model name. $ Options ['InputDefaults'] If you find yourself repeating the same input calls (), you can use InputDefaults to keep your code as dry: echo $ this-> Form-> Create ('User', Array ('InputDefaults' => Array ('label' => false, 'div' => false))); All inputs created from that point forward would inherit the options declared in InputDefaults. Default NULL settings that run at half based on the interval. This means that if there are validation errors on hidden fields, the name of the Error-Field class will be applied. A String A A A A A A A A A A A A A A A A e string the class name for the error message FORMHELPER :: ISFIELDERROR (String $ FieldName) A A Returns true if the field name $ supplied has a Active validation error. This method creates a element. Has a number of subactions that control of wrapping, the name of the wrapping element class and if HTML in the error message will be missed. In your controller, set a plural camelcase variable (group -> Groups in this case or extrafunkyModel -> ExtrafunkyModels) ExtrafunkyModels) The options selected. Data and fields Defaults The default values can be set using the A e a, ~ - selection key. For example above, the values in the data array sent would be organized as follows, if the Cakephp was installed on A Windows server. Valid values for $ timeformat are A e a, ~ - 12a, a e a e a, ~ - 24A, A and NULL. To skip validate the browser validation for the entire module you can set the 'Option' formnovalidate '=> true for the input button generates using formhelper :: sends () or sets 'novalidate' => true to options for formhelper :: creates (), a false value is used to disable / exclude options of An input field, therefore 'default' => false will not set any value. $ options ['default'] if A e a, ~ a "defaultA e a, ~ a" e was set to Boolean false, the Action of the form presentation is changed so that by pressing the send button does not send the form. You can overwrite the default options Starting the option in the input in the input () call: echo $ a e Input ('password'); // no div, no label with class 'fancy' // has an element of the same default label echo $ a e Input ('username', array ('label' => 'username')); SecurityComponent offers different features that make your forms safer and secure. False default settings: echo $ this-> form-> button ('send module', array ('type' => 'send', 'escape' => true)); FORMHELPER :: PostButton (Title String, URL $ Mixed $, ARRAY $ Options = Array ()) A A Create a tag with a number that appears through post. If all you are looking for is a button to send the form, then you should use FormHelper :: Send () instead. Setting the class name: echo $ this-> module-> input ('user.name', array ('div' => 'class_name')); Output: For = "Username"> Name more attribute setting: echo $ this-> form-> input ('user.name', array ('div' => array ('id' => 'mainindiv', 'title' => 'div titolo', 'style' => 'Display: Block ');)); Name
